MORE MUSKRAT FARMS FORMED

By W. A. DE GRAVES

Many new muskrat ranches are being organized this year owing to the increased demand for the pelts and the fact that the rate in the market is now $1.50 per pelt, an increase in numbers, said Allan Warren, of the Alberta Muskrat Co., of the Alberta Muskrat Co.

During the season 1925-26 Canadian muskrat ranches, with the Federal government, had asked for a special measure that would permit the government to buy up the pelts of the muskrat more than the half that could be entered for sale.

The vote came after the keenest debates ever heard in the legislative assembly on the three, and three of the U.F.A. supporters held out for the legislation.

Even though the government had to change its opinion of the bill, the U.F.A. supporters, who are in a minority in the government group, appealed to the other groups in getting the bill passed.

The government said that financial support would be given to the government, and the bill was carried. The recorded vote was 100 to 19 for the bill.

But the bill, which it had been in a little, Premier Browne himself entered the lists, and during the debate, some of the members were also heard from.

TORY LEADER EXPLAINS VOTE ON RAIL SALE

Declares Conservatives in House Did Not Favor Gov't Motion

As the legislature was about to adjourn on Thursday evening, A. A. McMillivray, K.P., leader of the Conservative party in the house, rose and asked permission to make a statement and on being granted leave, said he wished to correct an impression regarding his and his party's stand on the rail sale, as the motion was another advancement of the joint offer for the purchase of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway.

Mr. McMillivray stated: It had been suggested that the motion was not the premier's motion was unanimous. This he said, was not correct. The Conservative party had examined the motion and did not vote at all to support the premier's motion would have been a reversal of opinion on one section of the motion. The motion moved by Mr. McMillivray himself and which was rejected by the house.

Opinion Not Changed

He then said that he had been in switching of opinion and that both he and his party had been in error in what was in question.

In response to which exception was taken by Mr. McMillivray unfortunately arose a question as to whether the motion was taken.

The motion was put and there was no dissenting voice heard the motion was conducted in the usual manner in the official documents.

Minutes and Proceedings, the official record of legislative proceedings for the session, carries the following statement:

"The motion being proposed, Mr. Speaker declared the 'ayes' have it."

"The motion was unanimously carried."

A REPORT TO BE STUDIED

The published summary shows that the report of the advisory committee on taxation is a document which will arouse very wide interest and is due for careful consideration. The report is voluminous, covering the whole range of taxation, provincial and municipal. It contains a large number of recommendations, some of which are apparently very sweeping in character. The general effect seems to be a proposal for a stiff increase in taxation all around the province.

It is to be assumed that ample time will be allowed the public and the members of the Legislature to make a study of the findings, and that none of these will be incorporated in the budget to be presented during the session. It is to be hoped that the whole tax system of the province in some what revolutionary fashion is not one to be hurriedly adopted. Opportunity should be given to examine the proposals in detail, to trace their ramifications through the field of business, and to consider their effect in stimulating, or checking the general progress of the province.

The report should be left "on the table" for a year, and in the meantime as full publicity as possible given to its contents. In that way the tax-payers and their representatives may be given an opportunity to study the report, and there can be developed an informed and measured public opinion as to how far it is advisable, fair and safe to apply them.

THE OTHER SIDE HEARD FROM

The amendment framed by the opposition to the bill was voted down, and their formal dissent from the budget voices a protest because the Government has not seen fit to propose substantial increases in the tariff. That is not what the language says, but that is what it means. The formula is drawn in the bill, but the protest is that there is no difficulty in identifying its purpose. Nor in measuring its significance as to where the party stands on the fiscal question.

Regret is expressed that measures are not offered to increase employment in the mining industry, and to stimulate the United States, to preserve the Canadian market to the Canadian farmer, and to speed up the development of natural resources. For all these objects there is only one sure, certain and infallible measure known to Mr. Cahan, and that is to fasten the tariff on the West, whom he speaks on such matters. A more highly protective tariff is what is being called for, and what the Government is being condemned for not proposing.

Western people, who in the majority are in favor of a moderate tariff, will note in this that the bill does not propose to tax those who want to maintain the present tariff, and those who want a lower one. There is also a very consistent and very pronounced demand for a higher tariff. And behind that demand in Parliament is a very reliable and significant factor—the demand for a tariff. It is not to be forgotten that the Dominion Government is making enemies in some quarters in Canada by its policy of modifying the tariff, just as certainly as it is promoting the interests of the West by applying that policy.

A CHANCE TO SAVE MONEY

The Dominion Government is agreeable to the Mounted Police taking over the whole duty of enforcing law in Alberta if the province will contribute $220,000 per year toward the maintenance of the force. This sum is $4,000 more than Saskatchewan is asked to contribute for the same purpose. The difference is explained by the fact that more men are required to police Alberta. The northern half of Saskatchewan is a country without people, and consequently without services of any kind. The North of Alberta is studded with trading posts and settlements clear to the northern boundary, while the great Peace River area is in the pioneer state where police protection is essential to the settled settlers.

The Mounted Police in 1926 show that the provincial police force cost the province over $426,000 for salaries and expenses. There would thus be a clear saving of more than $200,000 to be made by abolishing one force and call upon the other to do the work of both. The saving of that amount is altogether too important a consideration to be overlooked. It is contended that the Mounted Police either could not or would not do the work properly there can be no defense for continuing a duplicate organization at such a cost.

Objection is made that the provincial Government does not have sufficient control over the Dominion force. On paper the objection looks more formidable than it really is. Up until the closing years of the war, a period of nearly fifteen years, the Mounted Police performed all the functions which the provincial police did so with entire satisfaction to the provincial authorities. Nothing was ever given out to suggest that the provincial Government of that day desired to set up a force of its own. On the contrary, the arrangement was apparently cancelled on the initiative of the Dominion Government for reasons which nobody has yet been able to find out. If the "Mounties" could and did enforce provincial law in a satisfactory way through all those years, it is not at all convincing to be told that they might not do it again.

It is to the tax-payers serving to the tax-payers of the province in sight, there can surely be worked out a scheme of control which would avoid the well-known dangers of dual authority, and secure co-operation between Dominion and provincial governments in the exercise of their respective powers, and the protection of the public. Certainly if that cannot be done the primary trouble is not that the country has too many police forces but that it has too many governments.

Relative Worries

By EDGAR E. GUEST

Bill sees the doctor and cannot pay. Bill is a worried man today. There are sixty dollars he'd like to get. To ease his conscience and spare his debt, Bill will pay the doctor. There will always linger an unpaid bill.

Jim is a card player. But his debts are piling up here and there. Jim buys a note which he ought to pay. Income and outgo are quarrelling still. And a doctor's bill is due.

And where is the self-same burden of debt we know. A man is a doctor or a barrister still. Who is he troubled the more or less?

DOROTHY DIX

The Cramped Quarters of the Modern Apartment Increases the Old Maid Crop, Is Responsible for Many Divorces and Is the Curse of the Younger Generation, Says Thinker, Staging "Back-to-Houses" Movement

I know a woman who blames modern architecture for most of the social evils of the day.

"The reason why people don't get married as much as they used to, and why they don't stay married if they do get married, the reason why the world is full of young hoodlums, the reason why modesty is a lost virtue, the reason why women are more frills instead of big commodious houses, she says.

"Why does the old maid crop increase every year? Mainly because there are no more good sound-proof porches, no more back yards, no more back doors, no more back porches, in which a young man can do the courting. No youth is going to pop the question in a room where the mother of his family with pan reading the paper, has feet a-wag, and mother醋engraving on the other side of the portiere."

"Girls have their hate on when their dates come to the house, and they have to pose and pose pictures in order to have a little time to themselves. There is no room at home in which they can say a word that won't be overheard. But there is nothing about public places that induces a man's thoughts toward matrimony."

"Saloons and places of restaurant cooking and big bills are no protectors of sentiment. All they do is to make a man consider whether he wants a house or a car instead of whether she would be a good life partner or not."

"The reason the old maid crop has increased is that all the young men are married to mothers that are all the time older. For after all, the things that lead most men into matrimony are the desire for a home, the desire for a husband, the desire for a background of home and the desire to be rid of her chief enchantment."

"And, of course, the high cost of living militates against matrimony. In the good old days, when a young man could go to see a girl at the movies and spend the evening talking or playing cards, or singing around a piano, he could afford to go to a restaurant or two, but now, when he has to take the girl out and give her a good time because she has to be entertained, he has to go to the movies and Aunt Susan and Uncle Ben and little sister and brother, it takes so much out of his pocketbook for a wedding ring."

"And it is because there are so many houses to buy, that there are so many divorcees. Husband and wives are no longer breadwinning companions, because there are no more breadwinners. Oliver Wendell Holmes, the author of 'A Week at the Seashore,' was spending an evening sitting around a hole in the floor. Neither he nor any man in his family had time to go to a kitchenette dinner that has come from a restaurant."

"Nor can any two people live in the close confines of a couple of small rooms and be happy. They have to be constantly on the lookout for privacy of soul or body. They have no space in which to think the thoughts of a normal human being, no room for tooth brushing. They are longing for privacy, for quiet, and are bound to clash and run each other the wrong way."

"And it is these small apartments that are the devil's workshops for women. They are not interested in them as they are not interested in men, and have no pride in them as they are not interested in men, because they are merely temporary stopping places. They expect to move on."

"The little work there is to do takes only a short time, and this leaves the woman with hours upon hours in which to breed every unhealthy thought and magnify trifles into grievances, to be morose and inclined, or else to range the streets in search of diversion."

"Or there is the situation of the wives who go clothes-hunting and run their businesses, and the wives who are not interested in anything, providing flirtations with men they pick up at tea dances or matinees, and the wives who are not interested in anything, who are not interested, should find that nine-tenths of the ones who women who live in little apartments are having enough work to keep them occupied, and who lack the remaining more important part of life."

"This thing of a woman breaking a cup of coffee and cutting an orange for her husband for breakfast, and scrapping herself a bit for him, and then getting out every night to a restaurant for dinner will do away with any couple who are not."

"And if the lack of leisure for the husband is the curse of the younger generation, in a small apartment where there is no excuse for it, where the children can play, their noise and their games drive the husband狂怒, and they are hustled out on the street as soon as they are able to totter."

"And there they leave the less sons of the street, and acquire the more sons of the street. We used to pity the poor children of the slums, who were raised on salves and medicines, and all doing it, and that is why so many of our best families are writing big hands in helpless despair over their households and pockets, as they are able to totter."

"And it is the lack of houses that is responsible for the lack of modesty among women. When we had individual bedrooms with doors to them, we were modest. Now, we were sweeping about and performed our toilet right in the middle of the room."

"But now when we are crowded together like sardines in a tin while the dining table becomes a bed at night and we keep our clothes on, we are not modest. We are not modest, and it is no wonder that we wear as few and as abbreviated garments as possible, and that we comb our hair at the table, and make up our faces before the mirror, and that we are no longer able to pray in the privacy in which to cultivate the decesses of life."

"Of course," said my friend in conclusion, "I recognize that it is one thing to point out an evil and quite another pair of shears to remove it, but when we are so crowded together like sardines in a tin, it is responsible for the decadence in home life. I confess I don't see how to get to them in this day of congested cities, and high cost of living."

"But if ever I start a reform it is going to be a back-to-houses movement."

Norman Wilks Wins
Hearts of Audience
A Evening Recital

Norman Wilks, great English pianist, has every reason to be satisfied with himself. He has established himself as a friend to the public, and doubtless a favorite with Edinburgh audiences. The first indication of this favoritism was completed on Tuesday evening when he came to the stage in a most brilliant costume, and with an almost capacity audience in attendance, enthusiasm in proportion to his size.

First Appearance
Mr. Wilks, 26, was born here early in 1927 and at the G. W. V. A. Men's Club, the Edinburgh Society, and Women's Musical Club achieved a trifling of major proportions. Even on one occasion he was the sole attraction, and he was on all sides and many quizzed him on his choice of a career. Return he did, and it is greatly to his credit that he was able to make a success of his first appearance.

Mr. Wilks' ability there can be no question. He is a master pianist in the true sense of the word. His technique is colossal, sufficiently large and well balanced to allow his impulsive passages appear easy, while the numbers reveal careful and intensive study and the keen perception of the music. The secret of his success only comes to the mature artist.

Technical Giant
It matters not to him whether he is playing passages that call for the ultimate in delicacy and refinement, or whether he is called upon to call for a tremendous volume of sound. He is equally capable of both. And his technique is always kept well in the background, so that the music is the obtrusive. There are no 'taws' to be picked in, and this is one, one can say, of his great strengths.

Next came Beethoven's "Waldstein" and a most pleasant memory. Next came a Chopin group, consisting of a "Nocturne," "Barcarolle," "Schubert's 'Erl-König,'" and a "Scherm."

The program included in the first group "Balade" in D Minor, opus 15, and "Capriccio" in B Minor, opus 16.
